

Corporate Community Health Worker (CHW) Training

At the World Mental Health Organization's Community Health Work Training Institute, our Corporate Community Health Worker (CHW) Training Program is designed to train both your new and existing employees, helping your organization build a skilled workforce capable of making a significant impact on community health. Whether you're onboarding new staff or enhancing the skills of your current team, our training ensures your employees are equipped with the essential roles and skills needed to succeed as effective community health workers.

Upon completion of the program, employees receive certifications that empower your organization to bill Medicaid and Medicare for the services provided to your clients. This certification not only enhances the quality of care your team can deliver but also opens up valuable financial opportunities, helping you expand your organization's reach and impact. By training your team, you're not only investing in their professional development but also in the growth and sustainability of your entire organization.

Our training offers both online and in-person options, ensuring flexibility for your team's needs and schedules. The curriculum is customized to align with your organization's goals and focuses on key areas such as cultural mediation, service coordination, mental health coaching, substance use disorder, health education, and more. This tailored approach ensures that your employees gain the specific skills needed to support the diverse needs of your clients, whether in mental health, geriatrics, or physical health.

By investing in our Corporate CHW Training Program, you are not only empowering your staff to make a lasting difference in the community but also creating new revenue opportunities through Medicaid and Medicare billing.
